

MODERN MILITARY HISTORY

Air Force Advising and Assistance

Developing Airpower in Client States

Edited by Donald Stoker & Edward Westermann

Modern Military History

Series Editors

ALARIC SEARLE, Professor of Modern European History, University of Salford, UK

DONALD STOKER, Professor of Strategy and Policy, US Naval War College, Naval Postgraduate School, Monterey, CA, USA, 1999-2017

This series is dedicated to making available, at a reasonable price, quality academic military history, based on innovative and thorough scholarly research. While the main emphasis is on the publication of single-authored monographs, there will be scope for edited collections which focus primarily on new perspectives and evidence, as well as occasional translations of important foreign-language studies. Modern Military History will be framed in an 'inclusive' fashion, so that it encompasses armies, navies and air forces. While the traditional core concerns of military history—such as tactics, combat experience, technology, strategy and officer education—remain important fields of consideration, the encouragement of new angles and original approaches, whether methodologically, geographically or thematically, form a significant part of the editors' agenda.
